

If college prepares you for making a living, what prepares you for life?

How will you handle life's hard times? Do you have a plan for how you will deal with circumstances in life that might be tougher than you are? College student Steve Sawyer had to figure out a way. Steve was a hemophiliac who contracted HIV and hepatitis through unscreened blood transfusions, and found himself with only a short time to live. But Steve found hope. He started to know someone whom he called "the greatest love in the universe" (Steve's description of God). Blown away by God's love, Steve spent his last remaining months telling other students how they could live with hope no matter what challenges life might bring. Check out Steve's story for yourself: "Living with Hope" at www.EveryStudent.com.
